

Path To Peace

PEACE: Peace is a lovely word. And yet it can only remain a vague notion good for little more than tossing around in sterile discussions, unless it is infused with that more abiding and meaningful substance called human participation. True peace requires a commitment to the idea of many voices being articulated and heard, a pledge to uphold human rights and accepting the principle of pluralism. It takes more than words, more than a drop of poetry or a candle light vigil. It requires honest men and women to explore and champion the substance that can make the term 'peace' meaningful.
