The president of Sri Lanka Symphony Orchestra, Prof. Ajith Abeyskera on Thursday said in an interview with the "In Tune" that the concert will be a novel experience for both Sinhala and Western classical music lovers. Prof. Abeyskera said the concert will feature Sinhala oriental songs that are based on Sri Lanka folk and Indian classical music.

The integrity of diatonic harmony in Western classical music will complement the patterns of sweet sounds or swaras that produce mind pleasing sounds also known as Rags in Indian classical music tradition, when Symphony Orchestra of Sri Lanka presents a classical music concert this evening (September 05) at the Ladies' College Hall, Colombo, from 7 pm.

The concert titled "Classics in Harmony" will feature iconic figures of oriental classical music in Sri Lanka Victor Ratnayaka and Nanda Malini.

Abeyskera said about the concert on being asked whether it be a fusion of Western classical music and oriental music, it will not be a concert of fusion of the two great traditions. "In order to produce fusion, the two styles have to be blended to produce a different sound," he explained and added, "Classics in Harmony will stand to complement the two music traditions rather than creating 'fusion'. It will preserve the orchestral color of both Western and Eastern traditions," he said. "We do not want to create a monstrous hybrid as such by fusing the two," he added.

ern classical music fans to appreciate Western classical music," he said. "The concert will not be a pop show and the experience will be totally different because the Western orchestra will not become a pop orchestra by any means although from recent times the Symphony Orchestra of Sri Lanka has been changing its profile from being a purely high classical orchestra to being versatile," he said. As pointed out by Shamini Wettimuni, of the board of governors of the Orchestra of , they want to describe those classical music lovers who listen to serious music of the orient to Western classical music and vice versa. Singers like Victor Ratnayaka, Nanda Malini, W.D.Amaradeva and T.M. Jayaratna are high caliber vocalists. With concerts like this we hope to expose these high caliber performers to Western orchestral music so that they can appreciate the values of Western classical music, she said. There will be fifty to sixty musicians playing in the Symphony Orchestra. On being asked to describe what could this mean to all Sri Lankan music fans, Prof. Abeyskera said, "The concert will serve as a cultural bridge that joins local Western music fans and oriental classical music fans."

Victor Ratnayaka will sing a set of six songs at the Classics in Harmony concert. Unlike in Western classical music, North Indian classical music recognises voice to be predominant in the tradition of fusion a Rag. According to Sangeetha Ratnakara by Pandit Saranagadeva, music is defined as the combination of vocal music, instrumental music and dance.

Even without Dance and Instrumental music, vocal music alone can be called music. A performer should not forget that voice is predominant in the tradition of North Indian classical music.

Ananda Dabare, who has arranged music for the set of songs that are to be sung by Victor and Nanda at the concert had been familiar with oriental classical music before he joined the world of Western classical music. He learned Western music in Russia at Moscow State Conservatory.

Vocal recitals by Victor Ratnayaka appeal to the most discerning of music lovers, the man on the street. He is one of the most acclaimed radio artists and one of Sri Lanka's top playback singers of the past two decades. Lyrical content is one of the significant features of Victor's music for

Westlife

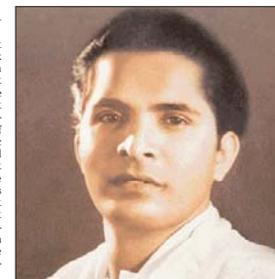

In the tradition of British and Irish boy bands like Take That and Boyzone comes Dublin's Westlife, a quintet consisting of Shane Filan, Nicky Byrne, Bryan McFadden, Mark Feehily, and Kian Egan. Filan, Egan, and Feehily were among the group's six founding members, but the other half of the group was dispatched when Louis Walsh, Boy-

Westlife promise 'strongest album yet'

Westlife have promised that their upcoming ninth studio album will be the group's strongest to date. The Irish boyband, who have not released any new material for two years, insisted that they will surprise fans when they return later this year. "The album will have no covers at all - we want it to be our strongest ever," Shane Filan told the "Irish Daily Mirror." "We're working on it in the studios at the minute and it's really exciting. We took a decision that we didn't want to do any covers at all this time round and give the fans 100% new material." "We know this has to be something special because we haven't been away for over a year. I think everyone is going to be really surprised when they hear it." Guy Chambers, former Savage Garden star Darren Hayes and Ryan Tedder, who penned Leona Lewis's "Bleeding Love" are all rumored to have contributed material for the new record. "We're lucky to be working with some amazing writers and I'm sure this album is going to bring us back with a bang," Filan added. "We want great up-tempo songs and some really strong ballads. That's what we made our name with and that's what we want to do again." "The plan is to release the album before Christmas and then hit the road for a tour next year." "Westlife have sold over 40 million copies of their nine previous albums, seven of which were bestsellers in the UK.

Sunil's splendour in Lankan music

Sunil Santha

The Independent Television Network recently staged a grand musical concert Sunilasa Sirisara at the BMICH and had it telecast on ITN a week later featuring the music and songs of yesteryear's great music composer, lyricist, Sunil Santha, who died without fulfilling his life's promise on a pathetic turn of events that made him merely exist in a society that was not grateful for the singer's service of complete dedication he rendered for the people of his times and later generations.

The concert brought back nostalgic years from the 1940s and '50s when Sunil Santha among the contemporary musicians devoted his whole life for the development of a Sri Lankan musical tradition like Ananda Samarasinghe who believed that both the North Indian Ragadhari Music or the South Indian Karnataka Music did not harmonize with the Sri Lankan culture and civilization.

Therefore these two especially Sunil Santha worked very hard to after his graduation and return home from Shanthiniketan and Bhatkhande music universities of India to work for the development of a Sri Lankan music school blending the positive aspects of our folk music tradition perhaps akin to the path followed by the Russian musical genius Tchaikovsky whose compositions greatly absorbed Russian folk music.

The singers who joined the two-hour performance Ivor Dennis the only singer who faithfully followed Sunil Santha's style of music over the years, Victor Ratnayaka, Nanda Malini, Sunil Edirisinghe, T.M. Jayaratna and Edward Jayakody performed Sunil Santha's songs as orchestra of senior musicians backed them.

Yet for those of us the two-hour performance that recreated the best songs composed and sung by Sunil there was one void, the absence of the depth and beauty of the golden voice of Sunil. What was the stamp Sunil put on the

Bonnie Tyler Returns with Total Eclipse of the Heart

Singer Bonnie Tyler is returning to the charts with a new version of her 1983 hit Total Eclipse of the Heart, which will feature Only Men Aloud. The 58-year-old said: "I'm delighted with this version of Total Eclipse and it is wonderful to be working with such a great choir as Only Men Aloud." Her song has been covered by others including Nikki French, Westlife, Jan Wayne and Tori Amos. Wednesday, 02 September 2009
